Preface from the President

«As President of IFSW, I want to thank each and all of you for the achievements in 2019»

To all my colleagues and friends who are on our collective journey of advancing the social work mission: Social Justice and Equality for All.

As President of IFSW, I want to thank each and all of you for the achievements in 2019. And as you read through the following pages, you will see there are many. IFSW is a global place of shared spaces. A place where different points of view come together seeking partnerships that set global standards for the profession while valuing the unique roles, cultures and contributions of the contributors.

Among the many outcomes from across the regions and globe, for me personally there are two that stand out. In 2019 the first face-to-face meeting was held by the IFSW Indigenous Committee. This is an enormous development within the profession as the voice of indigenous social workers now has an official place and space and the profession's journey of decolonization steps forward. The other is that IFSW launched global research into The Working Conditions of Social Workers. It is a great worry to many of us that the lack of recognition, low wages and high workloads has a serious and negative impact on the quality of life and health of millions of social workers. We hope that this research, alongside other evidence on the essential and positive role social workers make to every society, will assist in raising the visibility and conditions of the profession.

There are many other highlights, the regional conferences where passionate and inspiring social workers have shared their practice wisdom. The advancements of the four IFSW commissions - Human Rights, Ethics, United Nations and Education – have all built upon the past work and paired this with the current best practice findings.

I also want to highlight the role of the IFSW Executive, who along with the Secretary-General, have created a team environment built on respect, debate and advancement. None of this, of course, would be possible without the continued commitment of the IFSW members. Reading through this report and observing the members actions throughout the year on social media, it is fully evident that the Federation is strong, capable and committed.

I further want to acknowledge the IFSW partnership with the IASSW and the joint commitment in advancing minimum social work education standards and our combined work with the ICSW in preparing for the next ten years of the Global Agenda.

It has been an honour and pleasure to preside over IFSW in 2019, and I am certain 2020 will give each of us even more exciting opportunities. I look forward to seeing many of you at the General Meeting in July in Calgary, or through working together by email or in social media as we take the profession from one strength to another.

Dr Silvana Martínez
President IFSW

Introduction from the Secretary-General

«The momentum of growth, visibility and impact of the social work profession continued throughout 2019»

The momentum of growth, visibility and impact of the social work profession continued throughout 2019. The expansion of IFSW membership to 141 national associations and the developments of each of the four IFSW commissions act as testaments to the profession's increasing capacity, but further, the outcomes of social work practice are moving the profession to be widely recognised as the best practice approach in social development.

The reports are clear, when social policy embraces a social work approach people and communities rise out of poverty, marginalisation and oppression. When a social work approach flourishes more children go to school, violence reduces, the environment is treated with respect and community economies expand.

In many places throughout the world, the social work role of community engagement and facilitation in supporting people to transform their own social and physical environments has positively shocked politicians and policy makers. This approach is often referred to as 'supported self-led development' and typically involves social worker asking people and communities what they want through facilitating discussion and developing plans. Social workers then assist families and communities to actively lead their own development to achieve those plans.

In 2019 I witnessed many heartening conversations reflecting the importance of social work. When talking with a group of refugees, one commented: 'After walking from one country to another in search of safety and security and being treated like rodents at each frontier and by so many, it was not until we met social workers who listened to us and saw that we were capable human beings that we started to feel hope and courage again'. When asking young women in a slum who are attending fulltime university courses what changed so that they could become the first generation to ever entre higher education, they commented: 'Eight years ago the social workers worked with our community, and it was agreed to ban child-marriage and all violence, suddenly we had a future, and everything changed' they said.

These examples are not rare, nor have they occurred by chance. They are a result of the commitment and skill of social workers who understand the dynamics of local communities and the processes of social transformation. Since the Global Agenda, many examples have been recorded from a vast array of social contexts demonstrating essential lessons and the power of the social work approach. In contrast to top-down global and national strategies for social development, social workers have promoted 'self-led development' and championed changes in policy and service delivery to recognise the strengths of communities and support their aspirations. The results are transformational.

I join IFSW President, Silvana Martinez in acknowledging and thanking all the IFSW members, the commissions, committees, the executive and partner organisations for the significant contributions in making global social work visible and growing the recognition that social work is essential to social development and sustainability in every country. Thanks also to my colleagues in the IFSW secretariat Pascal Rudin and Lola Casal who have enabled the Federation to 'join the dots' by keeping us all informed and connected.

Looking forward to 2020, we have some wonderful challenges and opportunities. The biggest is, along with our partners IAASW and ICSW, setting the themes for the next ten years of the Global Agenda for Social Work and Social Development. Your input is crucial as it is our opportunity to build on what has already been achieved, to connect with other global strategies, such as the SDGs, and for social work to increase its impact as it strives for all people to feel secure, connected and able to contribute to a sustainable shared future.

«The National Association of Social Workers (NASW) condemns President Trump's planned raids on immigrant families. Although President Trump declared a two-week moratorium on executing the mass raid policy at the prodding of Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi, NASW demands he abandon this misguided, disgraceful approach. Rounding up thousands of families makes no sense from an operational point of view and this policy will not reduce the flow of asylum-seeking families amassing at the nation's southern border. More importantly, the planned mass raids are inhumane and will exacerbate family separations. # Global Agenda: 2020 and Beyond

The Global Agenda for Social Work and Social Development started in 2010 when 3000 social work representatives and social development professionals came together to set the priorities for the profession until 2020. This significantly successful period of the Global Agenda has been an essential voice in proactively setting and fulfilling the Sustainable Developmental Goals, working towards more peaceful and just societies and strengthening the voice of the social work profession.

Global Agenda, 2010 - 2020

Evaluation on the Global Agenda

Rose Henderson (IFSW Board Member) and Rory Truell (IFSW Secretary General) are the members of IFSW that together with the other representatives of IASSW and ICSW cooperate to prepare an evaluation the former Global Agenda 2010 – 2020. The project is led by David Jones .

Global Agenda, 2020- 2030

Consultation Process.

The social work profession needs to examine new themes and processes to expand the Global Agenda for Social Work and Social Development for the years 2020 to 2030. IFSW launched a consultation process, where the inputs of social workers around the world are crucial to build a robust and inclusive Global Agenda.

Please leave any comments on your proposed Global Agenda themes for 2020 to 2030 and any suggestions for how to integrate the themes across the decade which also allows the Global Agenda process to effectively respond to any unforeseen social issues that may arise.

Climate Justice Program

The IFSW Climate Justice Program (CJP) is for anyone and everyone – social workers, friends, family, colleagues, companies, universities, etc. Please help us share it widely!

Aims of the CJP

Educate — ourselves and others

Advocate — for changes in policies and practices

Be the Change We Wish to See in the World — by reducing our harmful impacts that lead to climate injustices and supporting projects that create local solutions in communities most impacted by climate injustice.

Read more on the CJP Website

What is climate justice?

The climate crisis is directly connected to human activities and not merely due to normal patterns of nature. For example, people and ecosystems have endured water, land, and air contamination from industrial pollution and toxic agricultural practices, soil erosion, desertification, and species and habitat loss due to extensive deforestation, and an increase in frequency and intensity of disastrous weather patterns, such as typhoons.

IFSW Climate Justice Program

While the climate crisis impacts all of us, those who are marginalized or oppressed are experiencing it to an even greater extent, creating climate injustice for people and our planet. Much of the burden of unsustainable consumption patterns has fallen disproportionately on the most vulnerable people in the world, who typically have the smallest consumption patterns. In addition, these vulnerable people receive fewer of the benefits of the environmental resources. These collective patterns of unsustainable consumption contribute to the climate crisis, making it a global justice issue for people and the planet, this is known as climate injustice.

Research on the Working Environment Of Social Workers

The International Federation of Social Workers (IFSW) is leading a long-term, global campaign, working closely with member organisations, to improve the working conditions and environment of social workers.

A core element of the campaign is research to gain the first-ever global overview of the working conditions of social workers, aiming to shine a spotlight on the everyday working environments of social workers around the world.

Working through IFSW member organisations and social media, a pilot global study of social workers was launched in November 2019. Social workers everywhere are invited to complete the online survey, which is available in several languages. The research is being undertaken in a partnership between IFSW and Bath Spa University Centre for Health and Cognition (in association with Ulster University Social Work Department). The first report will be published in 2020 and launched at the global social work conference in Calgary, Canada in July 2020.

Free Online Course: Caring For Children Moving Alone

All around the world, thousands of children are travelling across and between borders as unaccompanied and separated children. Different countries may respond to the needs of these children in different ways, but the concern for children on the move is a global one. More than 20 organisations, including IFSW, ISS, UNICEF, and UNHCR, have come together to design a course for social workers and others concerned with the welfare of children.

The course will equip learners with an understanding of how to discern and respond to the needs, circumstances and wishes of unaccompanied and separated children on the move as well as those at risk of separation. This includes resources and information to support prevention of family/primary caregiver separation; prevention of unnecessary placement of a child in alternative care; and, when such care is necessary, ensuring the availability of suitable alternative care.

Pascal Rudin, IFSW Representative to the United Nations on Children's Rights, has been involved in the production of the course. He says «Children's Rights are universal – they do not stop at borders or in countries of transit and destination. This course really emphasises the importance of inter-sectoral working and delivery of alternative care within national child protection systems – a field in which Social Workers play a key role.»

Priska Fleischlin, IFSW United Nations Commissioner, is excited about the new course and the cooperation of IFSW with several UN agencies and NGOs. She said «we are grateful to all those partners who have come together to contribute to establish this new learning resource. This MOOC is a model to realize the Agenda 2030; through partnerships and by using modern technology this group offers a vital, unique opportunity to equip our Social Work colleagues with the means to act in the best interests of some of the most vulnerable children and young people.»

Guidance in the course takes into account international standards and policies, including principles and commitments agreed to under the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child; UN Guidelines for the Alternative Care of Children; and the Global Compacts on Migration and on Refugees.

To make it widely accessible, the course is free of charge, can be studied on one's own pace and is available in four languages: Arabic, English, French and Spanish.

International Social Work Assessment of Children

Policy

When undertaking cross border social work, professional practice is consistent with the international conventions, agreements and the IFSW ethical principles which all enshrine the concept of the best interests of the child being paramount. Social work assessments are concerned with the whole person and the context within which the child lives including family and cultural identity; and should seek to recognise all aspects of a child's life.

An assessment in a different country is always best undertaken by a local social worker. Such an assessment would form a part of the overall assessment of options for the child / vulnerable person which the 'home' social worker considers in order to make the final recommendations to the requesting authority. It is likely to be illegal, unethical and unsafe for a social worker to undertake an assessment outside their own country on their own. Travelling overseas to undertake an assessment carries multiple risks of misunderstanding local circumstances and consequently producing a misleading assessment. A 'visiting' social worker may work alongside a 'local' social worker to complete an assessment if no alternative option is available. The 'local' social worker in the country being visited has a duty to inform themselves about the nature of the assessment required by courts or agencies and to do their best to meet these requirements. The 'visiting' social worker has a responsibility to provide clear briefing to the 'local' social worker and, where possible, to support them to deliver the assessment required.

IFSW recognises and endorses linkages between social workers via a Central Agency (in countries which are signatories to The Hague Conventions and the Brussels (11a) Regulation) and / or the professional partnerships such as those involving the International Social Services (ISS) to ensure high quality, accountable, safe and legal international social work services are provided.

Scope

This policy concerns the practice of social workers where assessments are required when individual cases are being considered, especially in legal settings.

This policy does not address the situation of children caught up in large population migrations as refugees or asylum seekers. There are specific UN Conventions and agreements relating to those circumstances although many similar principles apply. This policy also does not apply to abduction cases.

Socially Just, Fair and Sustainable World Trade Agreements

Policy

IFSW promotes the need for international trade agreements to be socially just, fair and sustainable as measured against the World Fair Trade Organisation's principles, the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals and the standards of the International Labour Organisation and consistent with the IFSW Ethical principles.

IFSW members will advocate for the realisation of socially just trade agreements.

Background

Trade agreements impact on all aspects of our lives. The lives of millions of the most marginalised and vulnerable peoples of this earth are severely affected by international trade agreements that promulgate exploitation, inequality and the division of wealthy and poor countries. Such trade agreements sanctioned by the World Trade Organization are one of the major reasons why six- sevenths of the world's population continue to live in poverty and have little opportunity for real and meaningful economic development. IFSW advocates that trade agreements promote human rights, fair pricing, international standards of labour, enforced corporate social responsibilities, capacity building for developing countries, agreed forms of dialogue underpinning supply and demand agreements – enabling all parties to participate, and share in benefits.

Following the mandate from the General meeting in Seoul in 2016 (see Appendix 2), the International Federation of Social Workers (IFSW) has investigated the establishing of a working group to consider the impacts of international trade agreements on our communities. Concerns surround the potential of several international trade agreements to act as catalysts for social and human rights injustices.

Following some difficulties establishing the working group, as the next step it was agreed that a guiding framework for socially just, fair and sustainable trade be established for IFSW to use as the basis for evaluating any international trade agreement. Following such an evaluation, IFSW could issue a position statement on any international trade agreement enabling the profession to voice its concerns and make recommendations to the parties concerned and IFSW members.

Partnerships with Other Organisations

IASW, ICSW, IFSW

In February 2019, Presidents Silvana Martines (IFSW), Anna Maria Campanini (IASSW) and Eva Holmberg-Herrström (ICSW) together with IFSW Secretary-General, Rory Truell, IASSW Secretary Barbara Shank and ICSW Executive Director Sergei Zelenev met to advance their organisations' joint interests and to strengthen the partnership steering a common path.

During the two days meeting, the three presidents worked on how to create a stronger and loyal cooperation at the tripartite level. One of the main outcomes of this meeting was the agreement to organize together a Global Conference on Social Work and Social Development on 2022.

IASW – IFSW

The International Federation of Social Workers (IFSW) and the International Association of Schools of Social Work (IASSW) have initiated a joint process of reviewing and updating the Global Standards for Social Work Education and Training.

The current version of the Global Standards for Social Work Education and Training document was adopted at the IASSW and IFSW General Assemblies in Adelaide, Australia in 2004. Over the last fifteen years, this document has served as an aspirational guide setting out the requirements for excellence in social work education.

Social Work Promoting Community and Environmental Sustainability Volume 3

Around the world social workers are coming alongside communities that are unfairly impacted by climate injustices and helping to create solutions. In these roles, we must consider the opportunities of promoting community and environmental sustainability, within and beyond the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). While we need to be well versed in the language and concepts and be involved in conversations and actions with global partners for the SDGs, we must maintain a critical eye on the limitations of this framework and help shift the conversation towards real solutions (i.e., which can be sustained in the long term). We maintain that this shift involves embracing an ecosocial worldview and taking a degrowth approach for transformational alternatives to sustainable development.

This volume of the workbook series is thus, an attempt to demonstrate to the profession our relevance to the SDGs, as well as to demonstrate to the world that social work is essential to the realization of sustainability, within and beyond the SDGs. This book is intended as a tool for international social work practitioners, students, and educators to help advance the Global Agenda for Social Work and Social Development theme of "working toward environmental sustainability". It is the third volume in the series and is formatted as a workbook, with short lessons and exercises to help you apply the lessons theoretically and in your own practice. These lessons could apply to research, policy, ethics, practice, theory, interdisciplinary work, and more. Whether you are a longtime supporter of social workers investing in social and environmental sustainability work, or if you are new and curious about the topic, we hope this resource will inspire and equip you.

Social Work Beyond Borders: The Importance of Relationships

Social work happens where people work together to create social development. The approach in this book provides living demonstrations of the social work role. It takes as its theme the fourth pillar of the Global Agenda for Social Work and Social Development. Every story relates to relationships that are created to achieve change. Telling people's stories, describing their experience, using reflective practice, has significant advantages over more traditional social science research methodologies which all too often squeeze practice approaches into non-functional linear frameworks.

Rather than following an 'evidence-approach', which usually minimises complexity and always lags behind adaptive and innovation practice, this anthology illuminates social worker's applying the profession's principles in contexts of significant complexity. Strengthening relationships, building solidarity and realising people's real interdependent power is at the heart of this book. Many more publications of this nature are needed to arouse discussion and reflection that will inspire future actions with families, communities and societies.

Executive Meeting in Rheinfelden

Representatives and commissioners from all the IFSW regions have finished several days of meetings in Switzerland where they discussed the priorities of the social work profession.

IFSW President Silvana Martinez said, "The Executive is made up of extremely competent individuals who bring a wide range of skills in terms of governance, procurement, accountancy, running large organizations and advocacy. They are all wonderful people with passion, commitment and it is a pleasure to serve with them to achieve social justice".

The Executive members, commissioners, and officials came together to share their visions and to develop exciting plans. Their discussions included the Global Agenda of Social Work and Social Development, building relationships with global partners to expand the profession's vision for social justice, policy development, action campaigns, and advocacy strategies.
