Dr Sebastian Cordoba

Dr Sebastian Cordoba (BSW (Hons), PhD) is a social worker, academic, researcher and policy advocate. Dr Cordoba has worked extensively as a Policy Advisor and human rights advocate in many contexts, including the Australian Association of Social Workers, advocating for social justice and the social work profession at all levels of government. He is also a lecturer, course coordinator and researcher at RMIT University, Australia teaching social work practice and social policy courses. In his policy work he has advocated against government policies that breach Australia's human rights commitments with a focus on the Sustainable Development Goals, social protection systems, climate change and the rights of children. As a qualified social worker, he spent several years working with children, young people and families, specializing in trauma and crisis work in educational and health care settings.
